WHAT WE THINK

on the month's news

Exposing the maggots

The controversy surrounding the BBC TV programme 'At the edge of the Union', in which IRA Chief of Staff Martin McGuinness was to be given a platform for the airing of his views, has at least had one positive result: where the BBC is concerned it has drawn the maggots out of the woodwork and induced them to expose themselves to the light of day.

The outraged howl that went up when Home Secretary Brittan requested that the programme be not shown has surprised a lot of people, but it did not surprise us. For a long time the Corporation has been dominated by people who have no loyalty whatsoever to Britain and who can be found to be siding again and again, in one conflict after another, with Britain's enemies. This was shown at the time of the Falklands War, when the 'Beeb' seemed at times to be more sympathetic to the Argentine invaders than to the British liberators. It has been shown several times previously in BBC treatment of the Northern Irish troubles and it is of course consistently shown in any radio or TV coverage of racial problems affecting Britain's inner cities.

The Home Secretary (for once) was of course absolutely right to place a ban on the showing of the programme, but to acknowledge this is not enough. There is something terribly wrong in a country where the showing of such a programme could even be contemplated in the first place. The British public has a right to ask of the Corporation that exists by means of the licence fees paid by millions of householders: "Just whose side are you on?"

People like Martin McGuinness should never be given any platform by the British media — not only because they are terrorists but because additionally they are enemies of this country. In that regard the heads of Loyalist paramilitary groups come into an entirely different category and should in no way be subject to the same rules. This is why it was wholly wrong to lump McGuinness together with Gregory Campbell, the Londonderry Loyalist who was due to appear in the same programme. Campbell is a British patriot who is one of thousands in Ulster who have been driven to organise themselves in paramilitary bodies for their own self-defence — simply because of the continued weakness of British Government in dealing with Republican terror. If the official security forces in Northern Ireland were permitted by Westminster to do their jobs properly, instead of being forced to operate with one hand tied behind their backs as part of the 'softly softly' policy towards the IRA and its allies, there would be no need for the Loyalist paramilitaries; they have only come into existence to fill a vacuum — a vacuum left by British Government abdication of its duty towards its own loyal subjects.

Campbell's line of argument in the banned programme was simply this: "The only way to deal with IRA is to kill them." He was, in other words, advocating that Britain recognise that it is at war in Northern Ireland and take against its enemies in that war the action that is appropriate to a war situation. Given the state of affairs that has existed in the province for the past 16 or 17 years, and given the fact that the IRA themselves are always claiming that they soldiers at war in the service of their country and should be treated as prisoners of war when in captivity, Campbell's viewpoint is not an unreasonable one but, on the contrary, one that should be heard and seriously considered. It must also be emphasised that the Loyalist paramilitaries, unlike their Republican counterparts, have no record whatever of killing or maiming innocent people; they do not plant bombs in busy shopping areas where anyone might get blown up; they do not murder British political leaders, soldiers or policemen; their attacks are concentrated solely on known Republican terrorist personnel.

The interview with McGuinness that formed part of the programme 'At the edge of the Union' should most certainly have been banned; that with Campbell, on the other hand, should have been allowed to go ahead. There is a world of difference between those who resort to militancy against the British nation and those who do so in defence of it.

Lefty humbug

Quite apart from the foregoing considerations, the overwhelming stink left over from the affair of the banned TV programme is that of humbug. No-one acquainted with the lefties in the BBC who screamed 'censorship' in protest against the ban can seriously believe that there was a grain of sincerity in that cry. Would these same people have been against censorship of a TV programme if its purpose was to give a platform to British Nationalists or 'racists', such as spokesmen for the British National Party? Why, they would have been way out ahead of the Government in demanding censorship themselves! What they really object to is censorship when it is applied against the spokesmen of anti-British causes; they would have no objection to censorship applied against the spokesmen of pro-British causes. Had the programme in question been, for instance, about racial trouble in Brixton or Toxteth and had it been intended to feature an interview with a representative of the British Nationalist viewpoint, the very same people who have recently been howling in favour of "freedom of broadcasting" with regard to the views of the IRA would be hell bent on organising strikes of cameramen or technicians — as they tried (in the event unsuccessfully) to do just before a Nationalist election broadcast in 1979 — so as to ensure that the programme was never seen nor heard. They are disgusting hypocrites of the very worst stripe, and they should be treated with contempt.

How 'independent'?

Equally ridiculous is the pious outcry from members of the BBC Board of Governors about the ban on the programme undermining the Corporation's worldwide reputation for 'independence'. It is high time that we cut through the mountains of claptrap that is spoken on this subject and got down to realities.

The first reality is that the very idea of an 'independent' broadcasting corporation is itself a nonsense from the start. Just why should a particular group of people be given control of a propaganda medium which places into their hands an absolutely enormous power, a power quite possibly greater than that of government itself, while at the same time not being accountable to anybody? The controllers of the BBC are not elected by the people and they cannot be dismissed by the people, yet for every waking hour of every day of our lives they command a position in our drawing or living rooms from which they can virtually dictate to us (excepting the small minority able to think for themselves) what are to be the correct and approved patterns of thought on the major questions of the day, what are to be the perimeters within which public debate is to be permitted, what are the issues over which indeed there may be any public debate at all! The very idea that such a body of people should be 'independent' is itself quite preposterous. A nation's broadcasting service belongs to that nation, should be accountable to that nation and should, in consequence of all these things, be subordinate and answerable to a public body that is representative of the nation. In circumstances in which we had a truly national government, that government would be the appropriate body for the purpose — and indeed the only one.

But of course equally real is the fact that the BBC is not independent and never can be. Someone has to appoint those who control it, and in Britain the Board of Governors which exercises this controlling function consists of people who are appointed by government to serve a five-year term. In theory they have control over programmes for the duration of their period of office, which they are supposed to exercise independently of government interference, but in practice the fact that at the end of their five-year term they can either be retained or dismissed by decision of government means that it is ultimately in the hands of government that real power over the BBC lies. The effective result of this arrangement is that the BBC makes its own decisions in the many thousands of day-to-day matters that call for its attention, in much the same way as does the management of a factory that is the branch of some larger national or international chain. On the other hand, it is those who have the final power of appointment and dismissal who control overall policy.

The overall policy that should govern the running of the BBC is that it should exist as an institution devoted to the service of the British Nation and that its programmes should at all times reflect that obligation. Debate, controversy and freedom for the expression of differing individual views should be circumscribed in accordance with that rule and within that framework. That is how the BBC should be constituted. In reality today the BBC is not an institution devoted to the British Nation but one devoted to what might best be called the Internationalist Liberal

Establishment, and debate, controversy and freedom are circumscribed in accordance with what that Establishment decides is proper and fit. Quite outside the range of permissible subjects in this regard are:-

- (1) Any serious discussion of racial matters involving articulate and informed spokesmen presenting both sides (this being distinct from interviews given to inarticulate and badly informed 'racists' that are simply 'set up' in order to present 'racism' in the worst possible light.
- (2) Discussion, under similar conditions, of International Zionism and Jewish power.
- (3) Discussion, under similar conditions, of the international financial system and the money-creating role of the banks.

Every British Government of modern times, and certainly the present Conservative Government, is in fact merely a wing of this same Internationalist Liberal Establishment as is the BBC — which makes the present argument between the two bodies somewhat of an unreal one and one most probably influenced much less by considerations of principle than of tactics. The Government most certainly has no objection whatsoever to an anti-British Irish Republican being allowed to use the medium of British television in order to spout vitriol against the British presence in Northern Ireland; on the contrary, this Government has shown again and again that its underlying sympathies are with the Republican cause in Ulster and against the Loyalists of that province. The likelihood is that the Government was simply nervous of the public reaction to a programme in which, following shortly on from such events as the Brighton bombing, the man who is the generally acknowledged leader of the bombers would be allowed to speak to millions in justification of their activities. This might lead to yet more uncomfortable questions being asked about the BBC, who controls it, what are its loyalties, what is its policy and what is the position of the Government with regard to that policy. By the ban the Government was in a sort of way protecting the BBC from itself, like a father placing a rein on an errant member of his family.

The dispute over the ban is not, in other words, a dispute involving a conflict of interests; it is merely a dispute involving two groups of people who represent the same interest.

because he is anti-British.

We should not therefore be fooled into thinking that the action of the Home Secretary in causing the programme not to be shown on August 7th stemmed from any real patriotic motives. It stemmed merely from a difference of opinion between the Government and the BBC as to the precise degree of contempt with which it is prudent to treat the British people at this particular moment.

We now hear that it is intended to screen the programme at a later date with just a few small modifications — which simply corroborates all that we have said here.

Sell out

Our view as to the true nature of Government policy towards Northern Ireland has been borne out by the news that a new plan has now been drawn up with Mrs. Thatcher's approval which will give the Government of the Irish Republic a substantial say in the running of Ulster's affairs. The plan passed Cabinet vetting on July 25th and was immediately sent to Dr. Garret Fitzgerald, the Irish Republican Prime Minister, for his approval — a gesture which amounted to a pointed insult to the loyal people of Ulster and a firm indication of the way in which British Government thinking is proceeding in these matters.

The cornerstone of the deal is said to be a joint office in Belfast where Ministers and security chiefs from both Governments would discuss and co-ordinate policies in both North and South.

News of this deal confirms what the Thatcher Government has previously strenuously denied: that it has for some time been engaged in talks with the Republic conducted in such a way as to encourage the latter in the view that it has a legitimate right to be involved in Northern Irish affairs and that the British Government is in fact proceeding, albeit ever so slowly, towards a sell-out of Ulster.

It is intended that at the proposed Belfast office Ministers would discuss and co-ordinate policies affecting all walks of life, including industrial policies, agriculture and tourism.

From reports of the deal it is clear that a major aim of the Government in putting it together is to secure the approval of President Reagan in the hope of getting more American investment in Ulster. Just why Britain cannot develop Ulster without American or any other foreign investment has never been adequately explained. It is also understood that the deal has been prepared very much a view to its obtaining the blessing of Britain's partners in the Common Market.

Thus is the spirit in which British Governments in these times approach vital British domestic problems. It is much more important, it seems, to tackle those problems in a manner approved of by foreigners than to do so with a view to pursuing the British national interest.

The proposed deal amounts to a shameful betrayal of Loyal Ulster and a contemptible abdication by Britain of sovereignty over her own territory and people.

'NUCLEAR-FREE ZONES'

A leftist idiocy examined

A NEW 'IN-PHRASE' has recently come into the vocabulary and can be seen on many a poster appearing on the streets of our towns and cities, usually by arrangement of the local councils concerned. The phrase is 'nuclear-free zone'.

"This is a nuclear-free zone," you may read as you enter the precincts of one of these cities or boroughs. So what actually is a 'nuclear-free zone'?

It is, apparently, an area in which there are no nuclear weapon installations and where the policy is to ensure that there will continue to be no such installations in the future. London, for example, has been designated just such a zone — by decree of the lunatic left-dominated Greater London Council. This of course will be interesting news to any future enemy of Britain in wartime for it indicates that they will not in fact be permitted to drop any nuclear bombs or aim any nuclear missiles on our capital city — for, you see, the appointment of an area as a nuclear-free zone means that no nuclear weapons may come anywhere near it, whether used by friend or enemy!

The hope of course is that, just supposing Soviet bombers might be flying over places like London in a future war, the pilot of any such plane will turn to the bomb-aimer and say: "We mustn't drop anything here, Ivan, it's a nuclear-free zone!"

Is there any past precedent for 'nuclear-free zones'? Yes, in fact there is. Hiroshima in 1945 was a nuclear-free zone. So was Nagasaki.

Both were nuclear-free zones in as much as in neither area were there any nuclear weapon installations. We all know of course what happened to these two Japanese cities. Last month marked the 40th anniversaries of what happened, in fact. We were treated to many horrific pictures of what those cities looked like just after the event.

The cities of this country have been saved during the past 40 years from suffering the same fate as Hiroshima and Nagasaki — precisely because Britain as a whole is NOT a nuclear-free zone. We have nuclear weapons stationed here, and anyone who might be contemplating using their own nuclear weapons against us knows that, if they do, it is on the cards that the nuclear weapons stationed here will be used in retaliation against them.

That, more than anything else, has protected Britain from the danger of nuclear destruction.

It should be pointed out that in saying these we are NOT defending the presence of AMERICAN nuclear weapons in this country. We believe that any nuclear weapons installed on British territory should be BRITISH-MADE and BRITISH-CONTROLLED.

Even if Britain does not have the capacity to produce nuclear weapons on the same scale as the United States, or for that matter Soviet Russia, she does, like France, possess the capacity to produce such weapons in sufficient quantity to deter any kind of nuclear attack — and that is all that is necessary to prevent nuclear war.

It is vital that for the future Britain retains and develops this capacity.

There is a danger, on the other hand, that if the mentality of those who have created 'nuclear-free zones' prevails over the affairs of this country — as indeed it might do — we could one day put ourselves once again back in the position that Hiroshima and Nagasaki were in 1945, and with the same consequences!

The bomb on Hiroshima. According to current leftist definition, the area was 'nuclear-free'.

THE DRUG CULT: AN ALIEN IMPORT

STANLEY CLAYTON-GARNETT examines the Asian role in an industry that is destroying the lives of hundreds of thousands of young Britons

THE MOST MOVING EXPERIENCE OF my pre-war schooldays was the singing in school assembly of Kipling's hymn Land of my birth. The sentiments contained in it were unchallenged and accepted and they seemed to possess the moral authority of a God-given truth. The question which then assailed our young minds was: were we of the necessary moral and spiritual calibre to reach the high standards which our membership of the British race, through destiny, had placed us under the obligation to meet? We would strive and sacrifice for our race and nation but would we prove worthy in the end?

This moral challenge inspired us to pursue excellence in all things: in achievement, conduct and self-sacrifice. It also fostered the conviction that if we strove and then failed we had at least given our all in the service of our country. We were confident, proud and reassured by Britain's greatness and the benefits it had brought the world by its singular achievements, and in our eyes the greatest of all moral crimes was to let our country or ourselves down. Mean and despicable behaviour were indelible stains on one's character and an adverse reflection on one's family. Honour was everything, and the collective honour of the British people was expressed in our country's nobility, integrity and achievement.

The achievements of those generations committed to honour and patriotism are enshrined in the many British graves in foreign fields where our countrymen served as soldiers, administrators, explorers and medical missionaries. These people served their country selflessly and were motivated by the highest ideals and patriotic principles. These ideals ran across the restrictive lines of class divisions and social privilege, and they constituted the reposed, sacred truths of the British people and their British culture. The Latin dictum mens sana in corpore sano (a healthy mind in a healthy body) provided the basis for the personal aspirations of the young people of the pre-war and immediate post-war generations. A large section of the pre-war generation was materially deprived, but in comparative terms they were spiritually and morally enriched. It is significant that the German National Socialists also adopted and were inspired by that truistic Latin dictum, which was translated into gesunder geist in gesunden korper.

The carnage of the Second World War between racially compatible countries like

Britain and Germany eroded the basis of well ordered European societies and in the post-war years high principles of living were replaced by the cult of 'permissiveness', racial pollution and the unnatural perversions which, only now, are reaping natural retribution. Alas! This article is not about the noble and the inspired but, conversely, about the ultimate defilement of our heritage — a defilement which stands in sharp contrast to the idealism of the generations which were inspired by Kipling and the British ideal. It is about the corruptive drug culture and the evil men and weak politicians who are the instruments of its creation

In the pre-war years, before television became the universal opiate, if one wished to be mildly horrified one read the thrillers of Arthur Conan Doyle and Edgar Wallace. Mild they were, devoid of excessive violence and gratuitous sexual gymnastics and in them good always triumphed over evil — which provided an exemplary lesson in morality. Even the arch-villains, such as Dr. Fu Manchu and the sinister Professor Moriarty, possessed a certain obscure human dignity and committed their heinous crimes with appropriate discretion.

OPIUM

The most fiendish institution to emerge from the pages of these thrillers was the opium den, usually situated in Soho, where expatriate Chinese smoked hashish under the influence of the Chinese 'tongs'. It was all very alien and un-British and the readers of these novels were amazed by this literary degradation but they reassured themselves by the thought that after all it was only 'fiction' and that no decent Chinese, and certainly no Briton, could ever fall to such depths. The idea that anyone would ever engage in pursuits which resulted in self-inflicted body wounds and then expect society to sacrifice to pay for their remedial treatment was beyond that generation's comprehension. And the idea that this country could be colonised by aliens from the Indian sub-continent who would, along with other white anti-social elements, import and distribute narcotics, and that the police of this country would be required to maintain a 'low profile' while a large section of British youth was driven into drug-addiction, would have seemed more fictional and incredible than anything produced by the pens of Conan Doyle or Edgar Wallace.

Yet in 1985, nearly 100 years after Rudyard Kipling wrote the stirring words of the hymn Land of my birth, that is the situation with which we are now confronted in this country. Most parts of Britain today are affected by the drug problem, and certainly all those areas which have a large 'ethnic minority' population. My study here, which is perhaps a mirror image of the situation in other areas, relates primarily to the situation in the West Riding of Yorkshire.

The open selling of drugs from stalls at last year's 'rock festival', held at Nostell Priory, near Wakefield, the ancient family seat of Lord St. Oswald, brought into focus the easy availability of those drugs and the prevalence of open drug-trafficking. Journalists, who are not the most shockable of the human species, were horrified and put into a state of abject terror by the behaviour of a violent cult of sub-humans called 'Convoy', who protected the drug-pushers from the police by hurling stones and indulging in aggressive conduct involving the use of bayonets. The police adopted a 'low profile' approach, and journalists who protested against the illegality of the proceedings were attacked and evicted from the grounds by the narcotic trading thugs. Several newspapers, led by the Yorkshire Post, initiated programmes of investigative journalism into the drug trade following this monstrous event. The results of their investigations casts doubt upon the wisdom of the 'low profile' approach the police adopted — usually as a result of the Asian-related nature of the offences — and in general reflects unfavourably on the merits of a multi-racial society.

SMUGGLED THROUGH HEATHROW

It is a fact, established by newspaper investigators and widely reported in the press, that most heroin entering the United Kingdom is smuggled through Heathrow Airport by Asians. When Ray Honeyford wrote in the Salisbury Review that Pakistan was the drugs capital of the world" he was telling an inconvenient truth, which was more probably the reason for his subsequent persecution than his educational views. Consignments of drugs worth many thousands of pounds reach Heathrow daily and are delivered to wholesalers via the motorway network. Heroin supplies are ordered mainly from Bradford, but it is alleged that Sheffield is the North of England's main distribution point, with the depressed steel town of Rotherham having the worst addiction levels in Yorkshire. Regions where the problems are most acute are those containing the major cities: the London area, the North, the North West and the West Midlands — although I have seen cannabis smoked quite openly in the elegant streets of Harrogate. The Yorkshire Post of May 20th 1985 published a report in which it stated:-

"Britain is in the grip of a heroin epidemic of such proportions that its very excess has taken the authorities by surprise. There is mounting evidence — some of it presented in these pages — that the cheapness and easy availability of heroin has created a major drug problem not only in our major cities but also in the smaller towns and rural areas. Agencies such as the police and the Customs and Excise are under-staffed and sometimes ill-equipped to stem, let alone turn, the mounting tide.

"The vast majority of health authorities hardly have any idea of the extent of the problem they are facing, let alone how to deal with it.

"The speed with which the situation has developed in the last few years has meant that many of these authorities already equipped with drug addiction facilities have found themselves completely overwhelmed.

"Many areas have no facilities at all to treat drug-addiction and can only offer hospital treatment for those suffering from withdrawal symptoms. Hundreds of new addicts taking notifiable drugs, mainly opiates, are being identified each month."

This article, having identified the problem, proceeds to place the blame squarely on the shoulders of Asian drug-traffickers who have established this odious trade in the cauldron of disillusionment and multi-culturalism which passes for a society in contemporary Britain. The report continues:-

"The vast majority of heroin consumed, in ever increasing quantities, originates from Pakistan. It travels thousands of miles across continents, making fortunes for some Asian 'Mr. Bigs' and bringing destitution and destruction to others.

"Within hours of our reporters going in search of heroin they had found it in the Rotherham and Sheffield area, which with Bradford is regarded as the drugs capital of the North of England.

"At the Perseverance Hotel in Bradford they bought heroin with the minimum of trouble and were told there was a constant supply. Here, in an establishment with a drinks licence until 1 a.m., where drugs are sold and used regularly in the bar, 'joints' are actually made up in the bar and the business of drug-dealing in the streets at night takes on the atmosphere of a bazaar.

"On a recent Friday night almost 100 deals took place in the streets in the hour before midnight. On a Saturday, in daylight, 18 cars pulled up, 16 of them containing white youths to buy substances from West Indians in the streets around the Perseverance.

"At the Blues Club in Sheffield's Spital Hill one of our reporters was beaten up and robbed after purchasing a gramme of heroin for £85 from a dealer parked on the main road outside.

"A cocaine deal was arranged in Barnsley through a dealer who travelled to London and back in a day bus for what he called a 'shipping order' for various drugs.

"The Hayfield Public House in Leeds resembles a street bazaar as young Blacks compete openly to sell a wide range of cannabis products. Harder drugs were said to be available by special arrangement. A similar situation exists here to that at the Toxteth. On Sunday, August 4th, the Sunday Post published a horrifying report under the heading "Drugs from the ice cream van". It said:-

"A sinister new trade has developed on the streets of Glasgow. A small number of ice cream traders are selling cannabis and heroin from their vans. It is horrifying legitimate traders, police and ice cream companies.

"One trader, who asked to remain anonymous for fear of reprisals, said that the drug-dealing goes on mainly in the sprawling housing schemes of Cartyne, Castlemilk, Easterbrook, Garthamlock, Barlanark and Ruchazie.

"Drugs are sold in two ways — either in Perseverance, with drug deals inside and outside the building taking place constantly. If individual deals for £5 or even £2 seem inconsequential to some people, the fact is that heroin can be bought by a curious teenager for £10 a 'wrap'. It is possible to become addicted in one week.

"The report of a professional analyst engaged by the Yorkshire Post shows that all the drugs purchased were authentic.

"The police and the Customs and Excise investigators face innumerable handicaps in their fight against drugs abuse. And of course it would be naive to presume that the problem will go away simply by closing down establishments referred to here. Yet it would be a start. Police worries about triggering off potential race riots (author's emphasis) are relevant, but they are drawing the line too soon."

NATIONAL PROBLEM

The examples given in the above article are microscopic in respect of the magnitude of the problem nationally. Since the date of the above article a 14-year-old boy Jason Fitzsimmons has died from heroin addiction in small plastic bags at £5 or £10 a time or wrapped in silver paper and pushed into the hollows of ice cream cones. The ice cream man then covers the top with a scoop of ice cream. Again cost is £5 or £10 a time and customers are mainly aged from 16 to 20 years of age."

The coroner presiding over the inquest on Jason Fitzsimmons made a poignant observation that these young drug addicts are the fathers and mothers of the future (if they ever survive). What hope then for their children?

ASIAN 'MR. BIGS'

The drug pushers, as nauseating as they are, are only the sharp end of an industry controlled from Asia which spreads its tentacles throughout those countries where Asians have been permitted to settle. The base of this industry is composed of a ruthless group of Asian 'Mr. Bigs' who are known to the police and to their communities in Britain and who continue to exist through their capacity for intimidation and through the wet fear of the British Establishment of enforcing the law in case of resulting racial violence.

The premier drugs baron of Bradford is one Mohammed Iqbal, who is reputed to have earned more than £1 million a year from trafficking in heroin. He is known within the Pakistani community as 'The Khan' and conducts himself with the arrogance and ease of an eastern potentate. He is reputed to have gambled up to £100,000 a night in local casinos and boasts of his prowess with women and skill as professional gambler. He claims that the source of his considerable personal fortune is his legitimate business in Bradford conducted in association with his two brothers, Sultan Bahadur Khan and Mohammad Bahadur Khan (alias Jhalla Khan and also known as the Crazy Khan). He claims that his grocery business yielded £2,000 a week in the 1970s, when the average wage of a worker was £30 a week. In an interview with a Yorkshire Post reporter he stated:-

"We also had a flourishing business sending remittances to dependants of Pakistani workers back home through an illegal 'Hundi' (slip) system and we made a lot of money from this business. We also had a flourishing business with Afghan importers through Pakistan. We never had and still don't have any problems with money. Our kinfolk from Walsla live in their hundreds in Bradford, Leeds and Sheffield and other British cities."

PRIVILEGED BACKGROUND

Mohammed Iqbal was born into a family of wealthy landowners in Pakistan on August 1st 1952 and arrived in Bradford 17 years ago. He was not motivated to emigrate to Britain in a quest for work like so many of his fellow countrymen but by Britain's lifestyle in the so-called Swinging Sixties. Iqbal's love of gambling brought him into contact with a Briton called William Butterfield, an established dealer in amphetamines. Butterfield convinced Iqbal that by using his contacts within the Pakistani community the two could make a fortune out of the developing heroin trade. Many prominent operators in the Pakistani-controlled heroin business originate in the upper echelons of Pakistani society, all with good family connections and capital resources to fund the operational costs of this pernicious industry. Iqbal therefore had an ideal pedigree. He quickly established a network of agents in London, Bradford, Leeds and Amsterdam. He was involved in the heroin trade, as a principal operator, for over 6 years, during which time he seemed adept at avoiding the attentions of the police. He took advantage of the typical Pakistani wall-of-silence technique which is activated by members of that community to thwart the police whenever a member of the community is subject to investigation. Within the Pakistani community it is alleged that Iqbal is revered by the old and hero-worshipped by the young, who vie to imitate his style and mannerisms.

MURDER CHARGE

On June 7th 1982 Iqbal was arrested and charged with the murder of a former school friend from his days in Pakistan, a taxi driver by the name of Sultan Mahmood, who had been stabbed repeatedly and whose body had been dumped on waste ground near Bradford city centre in February 1979. After taking 1,700 statements from members of the immigrant community, detectives, not entirely surprisingly, failed to prove their case against Iqbal and he was acquitted of murder at Leeds Crown Court on March 2nd 1983. The police had reason to believe that the killing was linked to drug-smuggling and, despite Iqbal's acquittal on the murder charge, they continued their investigations into his link with the heroin trade. Coincidentally, Iqbal's mentor and former accomplice, William Butterfield, had been arrested by the Rotherham police on a number of alleged offences relating to trafficking in drugs simultaneously to the Bradford police investigation into Iqbal's drug empire. Butterfield, in attempting to bargain for leniency, informed the police of the intensive involvement of Iqbal in the importation of heroin into Britain.

Iqbal was arrested on February 22nd 1984 and he made a written statement to the police admitting his role in the illegal importation and marketing of heroin. On March 5th, having been in custody for two weeks, he was released on bail on condition that he surrender his passport. He then used a false passport and fled to Pakistan, a non-Commonwealth country with which Britain has no bi-lateral extradition treaty. The reasons for the bench granting bail to such a notorious character have not been disclosed, neither will the Bradford Magistrates Court reveal the names of the justices who were responsible for the granting of Iqbal's bail. In a multi-racial city like Bradford, with a number of Asians on the bench, one must wonder! Following Iqbal's predictable departure, Mr. Martin Flannery, Labour MP for Sheffield Hillsborough and a man not known for any anti-immigrant views, wrote to the Home Secretary insisting that Iqbal be returned to Britain to face drug trafficking charges concerning transactions involving millions of pounds. He was joined in this demand by MPs from all sides of the House.

Iqbal now resides in his native Walsla in Pakistan, safe in the knowledge that he is unlikely to be extradited to face drug trafficking charges in Britain and having left his brothers behind to continue the lucrative family business in Bradford. He has also left behind those whose lives he has destroyed — a matter of indifference to him and which will cause him little remorse. This catalogue of criminal exploitation and human misery is the penalty that Britain pays for allowing aliens like Iqbal to practise their alien customs, morals and standards in this our country.

The Sunday Telegraph of August 4th 1985 published a revealing report under the heading "Hanging of drug dealers acclaimed". It reported that two Australians, Brian Chambers of Perth and Kevin Barlow of Adelaide, had been sentenced to death by the Malaysian High Court for drug-trafficking. Two public opinion polls taken by television stations in Melbourne and Brisbane showed that in the samples taken 80 per cent of the people interviewed were in favour of the death penalty being carried out in respect of the two drug-traffickers. There was, however, a plea for leniency from the Premier of Western Australia, who asked that the death penalty be commuted to life imprisonment. Judge Mohammed Dzaiddin said that under the law of Malaysia he had no alternative but to sentence the men to hang. He said: "I have had occasion to state in an earlier case that the laws of Malaysia make no distinction with regard to nationality, colour or race of the offender, be he a national of this country or a foreigner." No doubt pressure will be brought to bear upon Malaysia to show clemency to these despicable specimens of manhood: but that we in Britain had the laws, the courts and the will to dispense capital punishment for this most dastardly capital crime!

What is the solution to this largely Pakistani-induced sickness which today afflicts our country and its people? Firstly we must recognise that it is a disease of our permissive, multi-racial, confused society. Drug-taking in Britain was virtually unknown before the sixties and it has increased in direct proportion to the influx of alien racial elements into this country. As stated in the Yorkshire Post report:-

"Heroin is now so freely available it is staggering even to someone like me.

"The Asians are almost exclusively behind its arrival in this country and subsequent distribution and it is the biggest money-making business imaginable. They won't be stopped easily because the rewards are virtually irresistible. The organisers are often responsible members of the community who seem largely untouchable."

THE ANSWER

The long-term answer to the drug problem is the returning to power of a Nationalist Government and the repatriation or resettlement overseas of the whole of the ethnic minority community. The problem, however, has now become so grave that one must look to short-term solutions within the present structure of our society. The death penalty should be made available for all drug-trafficking, either in the capacity of an importer, distributor or peddler. It is evident that Malaysia, a country with a longer experience of drug-related problems than ourselves, finds this type of legislation necessary and effective.

THE DRUG CULT: AN ALIEN IMPORT

Deportation should be used against those members of the ethnic minority groups who, using the wall of silence technique, seek to subvert the course of justice by obstructing the processes of criminal investigation.

Those who become addicted to drugs should not be cosseted and become the recipients of scarce resources at the expense of more essential and worthy needs. Therapy perhaps, but also discipline and the hard lesson that theirs is not only a self-inflicted wound but a wound inflicted upon their country and upon future generations. Their self-inflicted suffering will be the means of mortifying their flesh to save their souls and to discourage similar temptation in the future.

In his speech in Newcastle-upon-Tyne on August 3rd John Tyndall reminded his audience, and in particular assembled members of the British National Party, of the need to observe high standards of personal morality and he also referred to the golden mean of moderation. He emphasised that even before we achieve power it is important that we practise in our own lives the principles giving rise to a sound, healthy and strong nation. He spoke of the importance of marriage within one's own race and the need to raise a family in a responsible, cultured, moral domestic environment, with care for body health and fitness occupying a high priority. He spoke of our obligations to our country and people. In contrast to the mainstream ilk of politicians, Mr. Tyndall spoke of a moral society based upon teachings that would strengthen the fabric of our nation through honour, self-discipline and self-sacrifice and remove the moral weakness caused by permissive liberalism, which is the culture which has spawned most of our social maladies including the iniquity of drug-abuse. He spoke of Nationalists becoming a state within the state, a society in themselves, preserving those ideals that made our country great.

POLITICIANS FAIL TO GIVE ANY MORAL LEADERSHIP

Politicians usually are preoccupied mainly with acquiring mere 'clones' to put crosses on ballot papers and are concerned with achieving power to promote their own sectional self-interest. They have, in general, little interest in morality or human improvement — or indeed in respecting the body as the temple of the soul. They care only about vote-grubbing, behaving like political chameleons and saying that which they think will ensure their return to parliament. They are not concerned with spiritual qualities which separate man from the lower animals — indeed during these politicians' period of stewardship man has descended to a most debased, corrupt materialism, as manifested in our society by violence, drug abuse, sexual perversions and alcoholism in high places. Are our current crop of drug addicts the victims of the society that our permissive, multi-racial liberals have created? The answer must be an emphatic 'Yes!' It is equally true, however, that no man can escape responsibility for his own conduct as related to the environment in which he lives. After all, the unemployed in the 1930s did not turn to drugs, and the Jarrow marchers did not indulge in solvent abuse, even though they lived under much harsher conditions than the socially 'disadvantaged' of contemporary times. The answer to our problems, as John Tyndall has indicated, lies in creating the right national and social environment: an environment permeated by sound moral and educational precepts; an environment moved by idealism and a sense of national pride and purpose, together with self-respect. Those who have succumbed to drugs in our present cauldron of moral dissipation must be re-educated in preparation for their induction into a Nationalist society, and the remoulding of their fragile, indulgent characters will be given an importance at least equal to any conventional form of drug therapy. As for the reptiles of the drug industry themselves, they will have no future in a Nationalist Britain — Why, on second thoughts, should I qualify this statement? Better to say they will have no future!

SUMMER MADNESS

Universal campaign against South Africa is indicative of a Western death-wish, says JOHN TYNDALL

PEOPLE FAMILIAR with Jean Raspail's outstanding novel Camp of the Saints will know that the author's chief theme in that book is the death-wish of the Western World. A fleet of old boats containing a million migrants sets out from India and heads towards Europe, eventually to dock and deposit its load in France. The occupants of the boats have made no arrangements to be received, housed or given jobs in the land of their destination. Most of them are not even travelling on passports. They have simply taken to the seas sure in the knowledge that when they get to the end of their journey the 'liberal conscience' of the Europeans will ensure that no barriers are placed in the way of their landing, whatever the enormous expense to their hosts and whatever upheaval is involved in the lives of those people who have to make way to make room for them.

Raspail's work is most notable for the searing portrait it paints of the several varieties of race renegade in the Western World that serve to prepare the ground for this alien invasion: politicians on the make who tailor their every utterance to the specifications of the current consensus; gurus of the mass media who set themselves up as the helmsmen of popular thought; wacky priests who salivate words like 'humanity' and 'brotherhood' as if dogs responding to Pavlov's bells; degenerates and nihilists who welcome anything that will hasten the end of the civilisation they have been taught to hate. They are all there, parading like the characters of Peter Simple's satire column come to life, and each vying with the other to strike the most masochistic postures symbolising the White Man's guilt.

This unwholesome cavalcade seemed to have reappeared to put on a repeat performance in the orgy of self-righteous denunciation that greeted the recent response of the South African Government to what was obviously a clear attempt to mount an insurrection in its territory and bring the country to its knees. A series of riots broke out in various black townships, the chief victims of which seemed to be Blacks themselves — Blacks, that is, who did not share the view of the rioters that South Africa would be better off under a non-white Marxist Government and were prepared to co-operate with the European leaders of the country in the maintenance of peace and order based on the principles of racial separation which, so far, have enabled the country's non-Whites to achieve living standards miles in excess of those known anywhere else on the African Continent.

SAVAGERY

The manner of these attacks by Blacks on their co-racials amounted to nothing more than primeval savagery. One young man was caught by a mob and simply beaten to pulp. In another place a woman was seized upon and burnt alive. Even film shots shown on British TV news broadcasts, produced by people clearly on the side of the rioters, could not conceal their half-crazed demeanour as they thronged across the screen in that weird war dance reminiscent of the Zulus at Rorke's Drift, but without the latter's discipline and with the additional showing of clenched fist salutes which made clear the source both of their training and their sympathies. The thought immediately must have struck the unbiased viewer: are these the people they actually envisage giving power? Good God, they must be insane!

There is of course a large element of insanity in the present clamour against White South Africa but that does not alter the fact that those creating and leading the clamour are people who know exactly what they are doing — a subject to which I shall return.

BLACK SAVAGERY IN SOUTH AFRICA

An African lies murdered in the street. He is one of many. In the background are members of the mob. The salutes tell their own story.

It is perhaps apt, in illustrating the full enormity of the current anti-South African drive, that the present upheavals in South Africa should occur at exactly the same time as in another part of Africa millions are dying or about to die through starvation and disease, and a vast rescue operation is calling for considerable resources among the Western nations who are bearing the main brunt of it. In Ethiopia and The Sudan we see, writ large, what happens to an African country when it is left to Africans to run, manage and direct. Other countries throughout the African Continent governed under similar circumstances differ from these two only in the degrees of misery and chaos presently being experienced. By and large, the Continent has become a huge slum of human squalor, governmental incompetence and corruption and, in places, naked terror by African against African. The whole picture is a monumental testimony to the folly of the anti-colonialist policies which became the norm to be followed by Western governments in the wake of World War II.

In a world ruled by reason, the modern heirs to those Western governments would now be acknowledging the errors of their predecessors and undertaking a drastic revision of their countries' policies towards Africa, facing the Africans with the blunt alternatives of either submitting themselves to a revived form of colonial administration by Europeans or facing the consequences of their own preference for 'independence' by carrying themselves the load of their peoples' poverty and not expecting outsiders to bail them out of every crisis. In any event, such governments should at least welcome one silver lining among the dark clouds of the African skyline: the fact that in South Africa something similar to the colonial system has been preserved, there is order and stability, sound and efficient government and comparative prosperity for all the country's races — comparative, that is, to what would be their lot were they to live in any other part of the Continent.

But no, this is not the case.

Far from acknowledging the folly of decolonisation, Western governments of today do not for one moment call that policy into question but continue to uphold it as sensible and right, as of course do the majority of those who represent 'fashionable' and 'enlightened' opinion in the countries concerned. And far from welcoming the fact that South Africa maintains the old standards of efficient government and economic progress for all races that was the norm in most of the one-time colonial territories, they all band together to brand South Africa as the world's number-one ogre and in every way quite beyond the pale of civilisation!

INSANITY OR SWIMMING WITH TIDE?

Have the heads of these Western governments lost their minds? Are they really genuinely caught up in this prevailing insanity? Or are they simply cynically swimming with a tide they know to be flowing in a false and wrong direction but which they feel they cannot alter and therefore may as well join? I do not profess to know, because the minds of people of this kind are minds that I simply cannot get into and even begin to understand. I only know that a world which accepts such people as 'leaders' is a world headed sooner or later for the abyss.

As for the great legions of the bleeding hearts who of late have found a cause celebre beyond their wildest dreams in the 'Live Aid' campaign to bring relief to Ethiopia and The Sudan, and whose haloes protrude with almost indecent prominence in every public gesture and utterance of their leading activators, what are we to think of them? This question struck me as some weeks ago I turned on my television and found myself witnessing their hysterical jamboree at Wembley promoted to raise money for their starving black brethren. It was of course appropriate that the 'music' that they purveyed for hour upon hour to their entranced audience, both in the stadium and in front of TV sets worldwide, was thoroughly symbolic of the barbarism and chaos of the continent in whose cause they were professedly staging their show. Ten seconds of it was enough to make me switch channels in search of alternative viewing but when, hours later, I reverted to the same channel again I found myself beholding exactly the same scene. Trying to shut my mind to the horrific noise, for a few minutes I studied the appearance and gyrations of the performers, wondering in the end whether I was watching beings that had descended from another planet. Watching this scene and wilting under the intolerable din that accompanied it, I could not help being overwhelmed by the thought that what I was witnessing was not a noble crusade but an exhibition of the death-dance of European Man. This impression was heightened by the sure knowledge that those promoting the event, if questioned as to their attitudes towards South Africa, would in one voice shriek forth a wowl of condemnation as deafening as the electronic torture that is their stock-in-trade. Yet what would be the consequence of the black takeover of South Africa of which they would certainly approve? The reversion, before very long, to the same level of hunger and chaos prevailing throughout the rest of Africa, with their own black darlings the chief sufferers as a matter of certainty. Then no doubt these same people would be piously telling us all that it is our solemn duty to fork out millions more to relieve the starving in that part of the world, just as everywhere else!

Can these people really be the morons that their actions and attitudes make them appear? I doubt it. Studying the scruffy apparition with the Irish accent but Jewish name and looks who seems to be the chief activator in the mammoth 'Live Aid' operation, I would observe that he does not exactly have the aspect of a saint — while at the same time he clearly is not a fool. Someone able to supervise and motivate the 'gigantic programme in question with the success that he did has to have his marbles about him, whatever else. What then is Mr Geldof in it for? Or, more to the point, what is in it for him? In terms of direct financial advantage, probably nothing — for it is no doubt necessary for him to be able to claim, with truth, that he has not derived a single penny from his labours. But in the process of the whole business he has suddenly become a larger-than-life world figure. He will from now on bask in the sunlight of approval of 'liberals', 'progressives', internationalists and humanist-moralisers everywhere — and for someone whose career is in contemporary 'showbiz' that is not exactly going to be a handicap! The same may be said of the other kings and queens (of both sexes) of the 'pop' fraternity who gave their services to the enterprise free of charge. All of them enjoyed their little glow of goodness as they paraded their humanitarian 'commitment' before the world's TV cameras and reaped the untold benefits of self-publicisation in the process.

PREVAILING ETHOS

What might seem to be a digression in the foregoing paragraphs is in fact not so, because it describes developments that are very much part and parcel of the process now affecting South Africa. My point is to illustrate the relationship between the forces presently trying to bring South Africa to its knees because it is seen as a bastion of white 'racism' and the perverse and hysterical infatuation of our 'trendy' classes for every race under the sun but those of their own kin — and the more lowly, wretched and incapable the greater the infatuation is. Move heaven and earth to rescue the bushman and the hottentot from his own self-imposed degradation — while in the meantime let forth a symphony of hate against a small band of white men and women who, almost alone among our own race, maintain their pride and self-respect and a healthy will to survive. That is the ethos of our times.

That this ethos should prevail among the legions of hairy freaks who bear the banners of Lenin and Trotsky is of course quite predictable. The axes they have to grind are pretty well known and capable of instant recognition. What is much more revealing is the fact that the position of these warriors of the left is shared, in all except the smallest details, by the British and Western Establishment. No sooner had the security forces in South Africa responded, as they were duty bound to respond, to the terror and violence by firm measures of law enforcement than pompous and self-righteous communiques were flying forth from the British and other European Governments condemning — not the rioting, looting and killing by lawless mobs — but the shocking fact that the authorities in South Africa were actually showing that they did not intend to let it continue! Amongst those joining in this unctious chorus was our own Foreign Secretary, Sir Geoffrey Howe, who managed to lodge his formal protest to the South African Government for maintaining law and order in its own country while keeping a straight face throughout the entire act — some feat!

Following this little exercise in contemporary diplomacy, fresh outbreaks of mob violence occurred in South Africa, again without condemnation from 'civilised' opinion in the Western nations, but once more as soon as the South African police and army moved into the areas concerned with a view to restoring the peace and putting the mobsters down the familiar storm of protest burst forth again, this time in the form of a joint declaration of outrage by the Foreign Ministers of the members of the EEC, with a number of them — not yet including Britain — enacting the ludicrous ritual of withdrawing their ambassadors from Pretoria for 'consultation', always a silly posture engaged in by governments more concerned with show than with substance. Just what were the ambassadors and their governments supposed to 'consult' about — other than matters which could equally easily be discussed by telephone? No, the withdrawal was purely a gesture made against South Africa in the manner in which a teacher would admonish a recalcitrant schoolboy. Sensible and self-respecting South Africans — and there are more of them around than in most places elsewhere — will lose no sleep over such a piece of insanity but will just regard it as yet another example of the infantile state of mind of the outside world.

SANCTIONS ARGUMENT

Of more substantial effect is the proposition that South Africa, since she has committed the heinous crime of not permitting crazed savages to run amok in her streets, burning and destroying everything that takes their fancy, should become the target of universal economic sanctions. A number of countries of the West have already committed themselves in favour of this step, but in Britain so far no move towards sanctions has been made, the politicians being divided over the question of their usefulness. Characteristically, the division has centred entirely on the question of whether sanctions against South Africa will benefit or harm the black population there, with the Conservatives being in a majority opposed to them on the grounds that their main effect will be harmful. Of course what is harmful to South Africa's Whites is not a matter for a moment's

BLACK TOWNSHIP

These houses are typical of those available to most of South Africa's Blacks. They are far superior to dwellings available to black people anywhere else in Africa.

consideration; if sanctions damaged the Whites but left the Blacks undamaged, then they would meet with overwhelming approval from all parties across the spectrum, the Tories included, but the thought that they could have an adverse effect on the welfare of God's specially favoured creatures of the non-white pedigree is enough to prick the Tory conscience into impassioned opposition to the idea. Such are the criteria by which the great questions of the day are decided!

Throughout these events the stance adopted by the mass media was one that might best be described as 'true to form', with television, not surprisingly, in the vanguard of the anti-White South African campaign. British TV reporters operating in that part of the world seem to speak as if all trained in the same propaganda school, with voices pitched just about half an octave below the norm and in a tone which says:

"What you are seeing in these pictures is of course the terrible but inevitable result of what people like me have been anticipating and predicting would happen under such an unspeakably evil system as Apartheid — can we really now be surprised?" Every act of hooliganism by Blacks has been represented as the natural expression of the frustrations of people yearning for 'freedom', while every act of law enforcement by policemen and soldiers has been depicted as the brutal backlash of an oppressive regime. Not that it is quite spelled out in those specific terms — the message lies more in the cadences of the commentator than in his actual script. We all know from the tune rather than from the words what we are expected to think about the whole business.

Not that words have not been used here and there with the deliberate intention to deceive. One instance of this was when an army truck was pictured coming down a street with its occupants in the back scanning the landscape either side with a view to identifying rioters. "Here comes an army mobile patrol looking for trouble", the commentator intoned — an assertion technically correct but obviously phrased in such a way as to suggest that the members of the patrol actually were bent on causing trouble themselves! This was just one example of the many subtle tricks involving a playing on words that have been employed by the media reporters with a view to casting the South African Whites and their non-white collaborators in the worst possible light (I mention the latter because it is evident from the scenes of confrontation shown that no small number of the men assisting in the work of combatting the rioters are in fact members of the black community evidently not dissatisfied with their lot under the existing system).

THE 'BISHOP'

A central figure in the unstable situation in South Africa has been one of the great pets of the Western 'liberal' establishment, Bishop Desmond Tutu, Nobel prizewinner (of course) and unofficially acknowledged leader of those expected to take control of the country when the hoped for white surrender finally comes. Bishop Tutu has, as one would expect, been interviewed with great deference several times on British TV and given a more than generous platform for the airing of his vitriolic sentiments towards the Government which treats him with remarkable tolerance. The idea has of course been to build up Tutu as the spokesman for 'moderate' and 'respectable' black opinion in South Africa to whom everyone had better pay heed if his co-racialists in that country are not to be driven into the arms of the more militant elements. To this purpose no effort has been spared to depict Mr Tutu in the most favourable possible light. In one televised scene he was seen admonishing his more unruly followers for their act of pouring petrol over a woman and setting her on fire, which incident was referred to earlier in this article. "If you keep on doing things like that," the Bishop pleaded, "the world will not believe that we are ready for our freedom, and I for one will leave this country!" In another scene His Grace was pictured arriving at a location just as a young Black was about to be kicked to death by a mob of his own brethren. Cassock flying, the Bishop waded in and rescued the terrified fellow and had him driven away safely in a car, but not before lecturing the mob to the effect that was not the right way to behave! Vacuum middle class 'liberals' back here in Britain no doubt reacted to these filmshots by praising the Bishop for his responsible conduct and saying that he would be just the right chap to take over the Government in South Africa when the black victory comes. People, on the other hand, with that nasty disposition to think a little and question the picture of events presented to them by the media propagandists might ask how it was that Bishop Tutu just happened to arrive to rescue his black brother just seconds before he died under a barrage of boots and how a TV camera team just happened to be present at that exact moment to film what followed. The coincidence of events is indeed extraordinary — unless the whole incident was deliberately set up and staged by the Bishop's public relations department for the edification of 'world opinion'.

A tool of sinister powers

But how 'moderate' and 'respectable' is Bishop Tutu in fact? One of my correspondents in South Africa, a man whose name I will keep in confidence but who I can assure readers is in a position to be extremely well informed, tells me that this upstart in clerical garb is on record as stating that if the Russians should come to South Africa the majority of Blacks would regard them as redeemers.

FORCES BEHIND CAMPAIGN AGAINST SOUTH AFRICA

Tutu is of course merely a creation of the dark and evil, but nevertheless extremely influential, forces operating at international level to bring about the destruction of South Africa. He is a suitable instrument for the present phase of that campaign. Later, no doubt, he will be discarded when he has served his purpose, just as his fellow man of the cloth Bishop Muzorewa was discarded in what was formerly Rhodesia when he in his turn was no longer required for the purpose of reconciling 'liberal' boobs in Britain and elsewhere to the idea of a black take-over. All these strutting little agitators, who are no more than tools of powers which they cannot even begin to comprehend, are thrust into the limelight for their allotted period of time then cast onto the sidelines when that time has expired, as with Tutu it most certainly shall.

As to the identity of these forces, to describe them in full detail would involve the expansion of this article far beyond its intended length. Suffice it to quote the South African Prime Minister, P.W. Botha, who when interviewed recently on American TV said: "The South African Communist Party and the African National Congress give instructions from London for the investigation of revolution in South Africa." As my South African correspondent says of these words, "This, as you will realise, is tantamount to indicting the British Government of hostile aggression against South Africa. But the essential point is that the riots are not 'home made'."

As well as Britain, the United States is certainly implicated. Colonel Groenewald, head of the Intelligence Department of the South African Air Force, said after the 1976 riots in Soweto: "The revolts and riots in South Africa are American-trained and inspired." This is no less so of the riots taking place recently.

These facts, though the truth, are not all the truth, however. There is no basic British or American national interest to be served in bringing down White South Africa and were the British or American Governments acting in the true interests of these two countries they would be supporting the South African Government in its task of putting down insurrection instead of condemning it. The only explanation of their pursuit of opposite policies is that these two governments are themselves the tools and servants of sinister international powers working as much against the interests of Britain and the United States as against those of South Africa. Descriptions of the nature of these powers have been admirably given in the writings of South Africans Ivor Benson and S.E.D. Brown and in Britain by the late A.K. Chesterton, and I would better refer people to these writers than merely repeat at great length here the substance of what they have said. Their testimony, backed by an overwhelming weight of facts, is that the trouble throughout the African Continent since 1945 has occurred primarily at the instigation and promotion of International Finance, which power is in accord with International Communism in its determination to undermine the White Man's rule in Africa in order to replace it with a series of puppet governments, only nominally led by Africans, which will collaborate with the international financial forces in allowing them to get effective control over the enormous natural resources of Africa — of which of course the mineral wealth of the Republic of South Africa forms a vital part. These are the people "who know exactly what they are doing" and to whom I referred earlier in this article.

WESTERN SICKNESS

It remains a fact, however, that there could not be acquiescence in the plans of the world's financial elite were there not within the principal Western nations an all consuming sickness, engulfing leading politicians, churchmen, academics, intellectuals, journalists and writers and, not least, businessmen. Healthy societies would react to the machinations of the financial wire-pullers in a spirit of total rejection of their schemes, refusing to be party to the destruction of civilisation in South Africa and the dispossession of their own racial kith and kin there. That the whole mass of 'consensus' within these nations, including our own, takes the opposite position and positively wills this destruction and dispossession is indicative of a massive racial death wish, and that is something confirmed by the fact that that very same 'consensus' likewise wills the destruction and dispossession of our own native population here in Britain by much the same forces as those now bringing chaos to South Africa. What has happened in Soweto and Toxteth are not isolated phenomena; they are part and parcel of the same disease.

Sometimes it takes an event far from our own shores to throw the spotlight on evils we have at home — by drawing out of their rat holes and into the light of day the very forces that are eating away at our own national body. This is what the troubles in South Africa have done, and it is at our peril that we would ignore the hornet's nest that they have stirred.

NO MASTER RACE

Condition of Israel gives lie to claims of Jewish 'superiority'

A POPULAR THEME among journalists and writers fond of crawling to 'God's Chosen' is the theme of alleged Jewish racial 'superiority'. This is of course an idea which the Jews themselves are in no way anxious to dispel, although they would hasten to yell in outrage against racial superiority being attributed to anyone else.

The basis for the theory of Jewish superiority is twofold: firstly the undeniably high scores which most Jews are able to achieve in tests of intelligence; secondly the equally undeniable success of Jews in climbing to the top of numerous businesses and professions in the countries they have settled. That this latter success may have something to do with the intense tribal solidarity whereby members of 'The Chosen' give a 'leg up' at every opportunity to their own kind is of course dismissed by pro-semites as merely 'anti-semitic' sour grapes.

YARDSTICK

There is, however, an excellent yardstick available by which we might measure the claim of Jewish 'superiority' under fair conditions of comparison with other races. This is the performance of the country the Jews have created and which — alone among the countries of the world — they run themselves, not merely as the holders of political and financial power but as the performers of all those other daily tasks necessary to keep a society functioning, i.e. production, the maintenance of services, the keeping of law and order and defence of the realm, as well as the supplying of technological brains necessary for advanced industry — and, not least, the tilling of the land.

SUBSIDIES

Israel starts with an enormous advantage over other nations in the fact that she receives vast sums of money in the way of subsidies from the United States and Germany. Thanks to the titanic political clout wielded by their co-racialists in America, the Israelis are now getting yearly at least 3.4 billion dollars of free aid and charity at the expense of the American people. In addition to this, Israelis are still receiving — 40 years after the end of World War II — 'restitution' payments from the Germans for alleged 'war crimes' which work out to over £7,000 a year for each Jewish family of four.

Now you might think that with the aid of all this legalised thievery the Israeli economy would be thriving and the Israelis enjoying the highest living standards in the world by far. But in fact this just aint so!

ECONOMY IN RUINS

The economy of Israel is in an extremely bad way and has been for a long time. Inflation is at a level undreamt of in Britain, reaching at times over the past year as much as 1,300 per-cent! The country is racked by strikes. There is a thriving black market. Israel is politically unstable and is in every way a miserable place to live in. Large numbers of Jews who have gone to live there believing it to be the 'promised land' now cannot wait to get out.

All quite an extraordinary state of affairs for a country made up of people supposed to be the cleverest and most gifted in the world and furthermore enjoying vast subsidies — including subsidies from the nation which, above all others, the Jews hate most vehemently.

CONCLUSIONS

What conclusions, then, should be drawn from this contrast between the miserable performance of the world's only true Jewish state and the great success and power which Jews have enjoyed elsewhere where they have settled? Certainly conclusions immediately spring to mind and a certain phraseology immediately suggests itself. Were such inner thoughts, however, to be put frankly to paper, the result would almost certainly be prosecution of the Editor of this journal and his jailing for offences under the Race Relations Act. As it would be foolish to oblige our enemies in this way, it is necessary to resort to other language.

Shall we just say that the performance of Israel shows that the idea of Jewish 'superiority' falls flat.

BLACK 'UNDER-ACHIEVEMENT'

An ex-liberal schoolteacher looks back on past errors

It has been almost a decade since I left my job teaching history at a black high school in Chicago. I am just now able to look back on those years without feeling a knot in my stomach and a tremor in my hand. I often wonder how I managed to stay so long.

At first my assignment to the school caused me no distress since it occurred during my "liberal phase," when I honestly and truly believed that blacks were intellectually equal to whites and that all their problems were caused by "racism." Oh, there were a few "bad apples" who gave blacks a poor image, but the overwhelming number of them were good, honest, upstanding citizens. I shook my head sadly when my father warned, "You just don't know."

I began teaching my students with a positive attitude about my ability to communicate ideas and their ability to be receptive. The results of the first test I gave them were so low I was shocked. I repeated the lesson, fearing I had done something wrong. The results of the second test were no better. Still convinced the fault was mine, I discussed the situation with more experienced teachers. The consensus was that I was wasting my time, that I might as well be trying to pour historical data into my pet canary. Ever the faithful liberal, however, I refused to believe the other teachers, categorizing them as bigots who had obviously been taught prejudice at the knees of their parents. If my students were not learning, something was wrong with my method of teaching, although I had had no trouble in the past with white students.

So I completely revised my teaching and switched to a system of repeated drills, steering clear of abstract concepts and concentrating on reading and rote learning. At the end of the first day my students were parroting the lessons. Though it was obvious they comprehended little of what they were saying, I was sure that if they came to know the facts, understanding would automatically follow. To my horror, the next day's review revealed they had forgotten practically everything I'd taught them.

FRUSTRATION

One day of frustration followed another. Repeating, repeating and more repeating. Nothing, nothing and more nothing. In my frustration, I asked as many teachers as would talk to me how I could overcome my obvious deficiencies. The advice I received was terse and to the point: "Don't work so hard, don't blame yourself. It's them, not you." The most experienced teacher was an elderly, intelligent, distinguished man nearing retirement. He confided to me that on Mondays he would pass out a 50-question true-false test. The rest of the week he would drill from the paper and give the answers. On Friday the students would be given an exact copy of the test. Result? An amazing 50% of the students passed.

It didn't take me long to discover that most teachers lowered their standards until they could approximate the bell-shaped curve so beloved by educators. If some teachers failed too many students, they were chastised by the principal, who then "upped" the grades.

My talks with other newly assigned teachers reflected my own puzzlement. Finally, we decided the problem was an utter lack of basic reading skills. The elementary school teachers were allowing students to enter high school with a second- or third-grade reading capability. What had been going on for eight years? The obvious conclusion was that the elementary school teachers were lazy, ineffective and not seriously trying to teach the disadvantaged black kids. We still naively believed the fault could not possibly be the students themselves -- those poor, innocent victims of racial prejudice!

One day a teacher's meeting was scheduled for our high school and its feeder elementary schools. We were broken into groups of 30 mixed-level teachers. Our attack on the grammar school teachers was immediate. "Why are you sending us students who can't read?" We began to feel uncomfortable when the overworked teachers recorded their futile efforts to teach the unteachables. We were told of the insoluble problems and difficulties encountered in attempting to impose simple skills on students with IQs in the 70s and 80s. Each weekend, each vacation, resulted in almost a complete loss of what had previously been taught. "It is one step forward and two backwards," the teachers explained.

BLACKS LEARN LESS EASILY

Then it was the turn of the black teachers to speak. They virtually accused the white teachers of transferring their own low expectations to their pupils. Black teachers who had taught in white schools, however, sided with the white teachers. I left the meeting with the feeling that the truth could no longer be avoided. The majority of black students do not learn as easily as the majority of whites. In addition, they have difficulties retaining what they have been taught and have little capability for abstract thought and deduction. It was heresy, but I finally had to confess that blacks were just not as smart as their white counterparts.

My last teaching job was in a private school where the proportion of black students was about 1.5%. The brightest black students fit in fairly well with the average whites. One of them won scholarships to three Ivy League universities. Whites with the same or superior academic achievement had to pay to go to less prestigious schools.

Though very few blacks are able to compete academically with whites, very few members of the teaching profession will dare admit it. The courageous soul who does admit it is immediately accused of being a bigot. Feeble, illogical excuses are as common as grains of sand as many otherwise intelligent teachers deny reality.

The problem of black students cannot be solved by forcing them into a classroom with whites where their lower achievement constantly makes them aware of their mental drawbacks. The problem can only be solved by educators and leaders agreeing that there is a difference. A few days in a classroom with an open mind should be sufficient. Only when the problem is recognized will we be able to solve it.

MORE BOOK BURNING

IVOR BENSON exposes a further case of suppression by the publishing industry

A MAJOR LIFE of Winston Churchill, written by the British historian David Irving, after nine years of research, has been turned down by several of the world's leading publishing houses as "too controversial". And no smaller publisher is likely to handle a potential bestseller which the publishing giants have rejected because of the risk of encountering a similar ban by the world's leading book distribution networks.

The Sunday Independent, Cork, Ireland, which recently published a lengthy interview with the author, says that Irving's biography exposes Britain's wartime leader as "drunken, cowardly and hypocritical,"* but it is most unlikely that the big publishers were motivated by any tender concern about Churchill's public image; on the contrary, scandalous books posthumously denigrating and "debunking" the famous have become a regular feature of the book publishing trade in recent years.

Irving's answers to the interviewer leave us in no doubt that what the big publishing houses — or, rather, those who own them — found wrong with the Churchill book, packed as it is with information drawn from sources hitherto closed to historians, is its likely

Following on from our two-part article "They call it 'democracy'; we call it a racket", printed earlier this year, we are reproducing here an important article which vitally bears on the theme of the previous article referred to. This article illustrates perfectly an important aspect of the 'democratic' fraud, under which the pretence is maintained that in 'democracies' there is freedom of publishing and information, whereas in fact no real freedom of that kind exists; in reality the publishing industry, together with various ancillary industries on which it depends and which are dependent on it, can effectively censor any book of which the Establishment strongly disapproves by refusing to put it into print and, should it then be printed by some small back street firm, denying it publicity and reviews in the major newspapers and literary journals.

This article, which deals with an example of such censorship at work, was written by Ivor Benson and first printed in his newsletter BEHIND THE NEWS, obtainable from PO Box 1564, Krugersdorp 1740, South Africa.

Victim of censorship impact as revisionist history.

The real reason for its rejection will thus be found in George Orwell's memorable dictum in his novel Nineteen Eighty-Four: "Who controls the past controls the future; who controls the present controls the past." In other words, those who control us now and hope to control us in the future need to be able to decide what we know and what we think, a method of control which is quite impossible if conscientious investigators are permitted to tell us exactly what happened in the past.

What makes the new Irving book more dangerous than much other revisionist history which has emerged in recent years is the fact that pure history is joined to a personal story which would shock the peoples of the West like few others, if any, published in this century.

Only a tiny minority of truth seekers could be persuaded to read Professor Carroll Quigley's most revealing "history of our century", Tragedy and Hope, but millions would read the fully documented story of the scandalous personal life of a political leader who played an important part in shaping the world's unfolding history during and after World War II. And they cannot read that story without learning a great deal about the power realities of our times, information to which they have hitherto had no access.

David Irving started work on the Churchill book in 1974, after finishing 11 years on Hitler's War, a three-volume study which has been reprinted again and again by the Macmillan Company, after having been originally published by Hodder and Stoughton. The Churchill biography was first sold to Doubleday (USA), Hoffmann and Campe (West Germany) and Michael Joseph (UK); it was sold even before it was written because these publishers were all dazzled by the success of the Hitler book, and translation rights were sold at the same time in Italy, France and Japan, as happened with Irving's other books.

Then what happened? Irving's answer:

SIR: I would like to make you aware of the following: some weeks ago, unintentionally, I switched onto Channel Four and found myself watching Black on Black, described in the TV Times as "News, arts, politics and music from the Afro-Caribbean community." I was amazed and disgusted at the anti-British, anti-White content of the programme.

Shortly afterwards I watched the programme again, this time deliberately, and found in it the same attitude towards this country and its indigenous population. In fact the views and attitudes were frightening.

It is outrageous that British TV licence payers should financing insulting rubbish of this kind.

D.H. MIDGLEY
Middlesborough, Cleveland

SIR: I hear that a bill is going through parliament to stop 'racism' and its aim is that anyone living in this country found guilty of being a 'racist' will be evicted if they live on council property. I find this appalling and I shed a tear when I think of a working class man with his family in the streets while, very likely, foreigners move into his house. I thought we had freedom in this country, but obviously not!

I am only 13 years old but even I can see the implications of this proposed law. For the sake of my generation, please fight back.

V. SHAW (Miss)
Nantwich, Ches.

SIR: After reading the June issue of your magazine I felt quite depressed and angry at the bickering and squabbles that exist between the BNP and NF. I do not know of the internal differences and I do not really care. Here we are pleading for more members and more money and yet you continue to fight each other. For the country's sake, settle your squabble and let's get on with the main fight — for Britain. Remember — unity is strength!

NAME AND ADDRESS WITHHELD

(Editor's note: We entirely agree with the sentiments contained in this letter. The only thing wrong with it is that it has been sent to the wrong address. Its contents are surely more appropriately directed towards the leaders of the National Front.)

SIR: Stanley Clayton-Garnett is without doubt a tremendous asset to the BNP. A courageous election candidate and a Second World War veteran, he sets a superb example to our younger members. However, much as I admire him I disagree with his views on unification with the National Front.

For example, at a recent Manchester NF branch meeting a Directorate member, prior to his speech on the Front's 'ideology', made a vicious attack on the British National Party in general and John Tyndall in particular.

Unification with such people is in my opinion undesirable. I feel sure that many of our members will agree that we should forget the Front.

The British National Party has a fine leader in John Tyndall, excellent policies and a sound constitution. Sufficient enough to go forward alone.

FRANK DAWBER
Hyde, Ches.

SIR: The issue of the two indigenous Britons being refused jobs by Hackney Council on the grounds of race is surely prima facie a case for the Race Relations Board. Of course there is just one obstacle: public support and agitation by the media on behalf of the two lads.

If Messrs. Hughes and Ellis were of Caribbean or Asian origin, the entire leftist/communist/agitprop machine would have been wound up to provide enough vocal and financial backing to take the case to court.

This case just exemplifies the sick state of the UK today, a mere 20 years or so into the multi-racial society of liberal/socialist creation.

B.J. CLIFTON
Cardiff

SIR: I have been unable to trace the origin of the following. I suspect it is a translation. I wish it were on the walls of every school in Britain and in worked samplers in every home. It goes:-

Keep pure your blood.

It is not only yours;

It comes from far away;

It flows far away.

It is freighted with a thousand ancestors

And the entire future flows within it.

Keep pure the dress

Of your immortality.

(Dr.) PETER H. PEEL
Reseda, Calif., U.S.A.

SIR: Upon receiving your August issue, I was very surprised to see a letter from "E. Draper" in your correspondence column. I thought it best to let you know that I did not write the letter published.

E. DRAPER
London S.W.1.

(Editor's note: We apologise to Mr. Draper, who has obviously been, with us, the victim of a silly hoax.)

SIR: On the 30th July the Liverpool Police made an admission that they deliberately black out (how appropriate a phrase!) news of riots and crime in Toxteth. As reported in the news at about the same time, a group of police tried to interview several Blacks concerning unspecified crimes and were attacked with clubs and spiked railings. The 'black-out', the police spokesman said, was to give the police time "to analyse the situation"!

Firmly supporting the police in this hushing up of news about black crime was the local MP Mr. Alerton. This is the same Mr. Alerton who appeared just a few months ago on TV as a fervent supporter of a 'freedom of information' act. It would appear that only certain kinds of information are to be given freedom!

THOUGHT FOR THE MONTH

The history of civilised man for a thousand years and more has been the history of nations. Whatever the nations may owe to antiquity — and in Europe the debt is a heavy one — they owe at least as much to their distinctive national genius, which is both the animating spirit and the product of centuries of common effort, of living together, striving together, rejoicing together, being bound together in times of hardship and adversity. The amazing richness and fertility of European culture are conceivable only in terms of national diversity within the unifying context of Christendom.

Until our own day this diversity was cherished. Pride in one's own nation, which never precluded recognition of the achievements of other nations, was not a value to be questioned, let alone derided and spurned. Patriotism made all men taller.

Highly successful rally on Tyneside

LOCAL COUNCIL AND REDS GO FRANTIC OVER B.N.P.

TYNESIDE BRANCH of the British National Party acted as the hosts to the biggest ever BNP event in the North East of England last month, when the party staged a public rally in Newcastle-upon-Tyne on August 3rd.

The rally was attended by about 80 people, most of them local — although small contingents of party members did come from Scotland, Yorkshire and the Midlands.

The rally received quite a lot of advance publicity as a result of the local hysteria it provoked among the party's opponents. A group calling itself the 'Tyneside and District Anti-Fascist Association' made a loud public boast that it would not permit the rally to take place and announced that it was going to send large numbers of demonstrators to the event "to see the Fascists out of town." On the day, however, the turn-out of the TDAFA was pretty feeble in relation to what had been promised and the demonstration against the BNP was something of a damp squib. Police kept the opposition away from the meeting as the staging arrangements were being prepared. When these arrangements were completed, the organisers of the meeting told the police that the 'Anti-Fascists' were quite welcome to come in if they wished, providing that they agreed only to manifest their opposition verbally — if they tried physically to disrupt the meeting they would be quickly thrown out. Not one single member of the opposition showed willing to accept this invitation!

It had been arranged that after the meeting, which had been booked for a private hall under an assumed name, the party members present would proceed to Newcastle city centre where they would stage a demonstration on the steps of the Civic Centre of the city in protest against the refusal of the City Council to grant the BNP the hire of a Council-owned hall for its meeting. The Council officials became so terrified at this prospect that they scampered to court and took out injunctions against party leader John Tyndall and local Organiser Bill Owen lawfully restraining them from holding any such demonstration. The BNP leaders were obliged to comply with this injunction and the demonstration was not held. Nevertheless, the Council had the nerve afterwards to deliver to Messrs. Tyndall and Owen summonses for damages and costs in connection with the injunction. Needless to say, this is being contested.

Bill Owen chaired the meeting and Stanley Clayton-Garnett and John Tyndall were the principal speakers. Both spoke on the theme of the meeting, which was "Protect British jobs and British people". The two speakers dealt with the appalling unemployment situation in the North East of England which was a direct result of the international economic system to which successive governments had tied Britain. Policies of protection and self-sufficiency were called for as means of providing work for all.

NEWCASTLE RALLY
Stanley Clayton-Garnett speaks

The meeting ended in great enthusiasm.

Needless to say, of course, as no riot took place not a word about the event appeared in the local papers following. Nevertheless, much interest was generated among Nationalists in the North East and new recruits have already started to come in as a result.

Tyneside BNP are to be congratulated on the promotion of this their first major party activity.

Hull BNP hitting the news

HULL BRANCH of the British National Party, after a period of comparative local obscurity, has recently started to hit local headlines, and a big new wave of interest has been created.

The branch has obtained a keen young Organiser in Danny Withers, who recently took over from Tony Braithwaite. Tony has rendered tremendous service to the branch but lately has had to reduce his contribution to activities because of increasing business commitments and thought it wise to hand over leadership. He remains a loyal member and is ready in the background still to give guidance and advice.

Danny Withers has now gathered around him a team of extremely keen and mainly young activists. Paper sales have been stepped up in the area, particularly in the vicinity of Hull City FC football ground (Hull ground is pretty trouble-free — nailing the lie that Nationalist involvement is a cause of football hooliganism). Apart from newspapers, the branch have sold about 350 'Keep Hull white' badges outside the ground, indicating local interest and support. Interestingly enough, quite a large portion of the buyers were middle aged and elderly people, showing the BNP's appeal across the generation gap.

The branch has also been very active selling its wares in Hull pubs, where, according to Danny Withers, it has usually had an extremely friendly reception.

The upsurge in BNP activity has attracted the interest of the Hull Daily Mail, the main local newspaper, which has run a number of reports trying to deprecate the BNP activities at football matches by implying that its appeal was only to gullible kids — an allegation easily refuted by the fact that so many older people were buying BNP literature and badges.

Parallel with this activity, and largely because of it, there has been a big increase in attendances at branch meetings. In June John Tyndall spoke at a branch meeting at which there were about 30 present, all of them from the Hull area. Later in the Summer Stanley Clayton-Garnett was the guest speaker, by which time nearly 40 people (again all local) attended. Both speakers were struck by the quality as well as quantity of those present.

In addition to Danny Withers himself, much credit for activities must go to Gary Brattan, Derek Jennings, Bruce Massey, Andy Easey, Gary Tyson and Adrian Berry, who have all been in the forefront of literature sales throughout the city and beyond.

County purge on 'racist' leaflets

TYPESETTER FUND

Last month we informed our readers that it would be necessary for us to raise slightly the target figure for our Typesetter Fund. A second-hand processor we had purchased proved to be unsatisfactory and had to be returned. We were on the lookout for an alternative processor with 'daylight box' fitting which would obviate the need for dark room facilities — otherwise something of a problem.

We are now happy to be able to inform readers that a satisfactory processor has now been obtained, which is now in use and working excellently. The cost of this was £350 — as opposed to the £200 which we had paid for the previous processor. This means that we have to increase our target figure for the fund from the original £1,700 to £1,850.

At the time of going to press this month £75 more has been received in the way of contributions to the fund, bringing the total up to £675.

At the same time, and quite understandably, there has been a considerable reduction in the money coming into our ordinary fund, with the result that some of the total figure of £675 has had to be set aside to meet running expenses usually met by the ordinary fund. This deficit is to some extent offset by the savings we are now making on typesetting charges (most of our typesetting now being carried out with our own equipment). It has been necessary, however, to transfer £150 from the Typesetter Fund to the ordinary fund, thus making the target figure of money to be raised to pay for the typesetter £1,325.

We again remind readers that we do not send receipts of acknowledgement for donations under £10 unless specially requested, and in which case an SAE is appreciated. This is to save time on administrative work and postage.

Please send all contributions to: PO Box 115, Hove, E. Sussex BN3 3SB.

By-election & rally

THE BRITISH NATIONAL PARTY will be contesting Blackwell Ward in a by-election for Tower Hamlets (E. London) Borough Council, scheduled to be held on September 12th.

The BNP candidate will be David Ett-ridge (23) a man who has lived all his life in the area.

In support of its candidate the BNP has put in an application for a local hall for the purpose of a public meeting — to which it is entitled by right under the Representation of the People Act. The meeting is being called for Saturday, September 7th. This is short notice but it is hoped that as many members as possible will attend. At the time of going to press we do not know of the exact venue but we advise all members to keep in touch with their branches for further news. Although the event is mainly for London and South Eastern members, we hope that others from further afield will do their best to get there to swell the attendance.

Hackney & Tower Hamlets Branch, which will be organising the campaign, will be pleased to have all the help it can get for leafletting — it is intended to deliver a personalised election address to every home in the ward.

MORE BOOK BURNING

"Doubleday finally began getting the Churchill manuscripts from me two years ago and they began expressing alarmed noises. The editor there, Lisa Drew, began contacting my agent and saying she was alarmed at some of the chapters she had seen about the negative attitude towards Churchill."

Irving's explanation and arguments were of no avail: "They were so upset by what they had read that they cancelled the contract and asked for the repayment of about 100,000 dollars they had paid for the manuscript."

In the United Kingdom the manuscript had a more varied career. After Michael Joseph had begun to make some "alarmed noises", Irving relieved them of their contractual obligations and took the book to Macmillan, whose editor Alan Sampson (formerly of Michael Joseph) continued to enthuse over it for five months and then announced, suddenly, that it had been turned down flat at a meeting of the board presided over by Lord Stockton, better known as former Prime Minister Harold Macmillan, who was quoted as having said: "Over my dead body will be publish this book!"

Hodder and Stoughton (UK), who had made a lot of money out of Irving's book Hitler's War, also had a look at the manuscript, but were not to be tempted: "Thank you, but no!" Irving thought his troubles were at an end after he had submitted several chapters to his friend Philip Ziegler, then an editor with Collins (UK), who described what he had read as "most extraordinary, exciting material." But soon there were "other voices in the house," and Collins also turned it down.

Commented Irving: "Every publishing house makes different excuses — Collins made no excuse at all, which is fair enough. Initially Ziegler said, 'This is such a very appalling story that we're very, very frightened of it and I'm not really a fit person to judge whether what you are writing is true or not.' I said, 'We can get round that easily. Let's have the manuscript read by a name.' I suggested Professor M. R. D. Foot or the professor who has written the story of British Intelligence, Professor F. Hinsley at Cambridge, or someone like that, particularly Hinsley because he has been through the same records as I have and he knows what records there are that do entirely call for a complete reappraisal of Churchill's role in the second world war, particularly the intelligence records.

"Hinsley has covered very much the same ground as I have, except, of course, that I've cast my net very much wider. He hasn't used foreign archives at all, whereas I have used the Russian and American archives enormously, the French archives, the private papers of French prime ministers, the German archives, the Czech papers, Polish papers, and, in particular, the records of the Russian government and their meetings with Churchill — the entire series of telegrams from the Soviet ambassador in London on his meetings with Churchill and Eden and I'm very surprised to see that the meetings between Churchill and the Soviet ambassador, Ivan Maisky, go back long before the period when Churchill implies in his memoirs he started seeing him secretly."

'BEHIND THE SCENE'

Asked why in his opinion the big publishers had turned down his book, David Irving replied: "Well, you've got to realise, I think, that the generation who still sit in the boardrooms of the publishing houses, the Harold Macmillans of this world, are the generation who lost Britain our empire. It's as simple as that. They still have their blinkers on. They can't recognise that they are responsible for having lost Britain the empire and for our present economic plight, which is concealed only by the existence of North Sea oil. When that oil runs out, the full impact of having lost our empire is going to be felt by every citizen in this country, unless some other miracle has occurred."

Irving added that evidence now available showed that in the period 1940 to 1942 Churchill had put United States interests before the interests of the British Commonwealth and Empire, a fact which came out very clearly at the Atlantic Charter meeting in August 1941 in a bay off Newfoundland, when Churchill acted without consulting the Commonwealth prime ministers.

The Sunday Independent interviewer asked Irving if he felt that there was a co-ordinated campaign to prevent the publication of his new book.

Irving's reply: "There has been a campaign co-ordinated in the United States — the Anti-Defamation League of the B'nai Brith, which is some kind of Jewish organisation, has circularised people — I don't know who was on the mailing list. They sent out a 30-page circular attacking me personally about two years ago. I got hold of a copy and warned the chief of that organisation that if one copy found its way into England, then I would proceed against them — the libel laws in the United States are very lax."

Irving said that he believed that his book Hitler's War would replace all the existing works by Alan Bullock and Trevor Roper, "and the rest of them," adding: "I think there are certain forces which are frightened that my book on Churchill will do the same." (Irish Sunday Independent, 5 May 1985).

The truth about what happened to the British people after 1940 is, of course, not as simple as Irving's reported remarks imply, for the surrender of the British Empire and all the other colonial empires was only an episode in a vastly bigger drama which got under way in the late 1930s, when something happened that passed almost unnoticed at the time: this was a shift in the centre of gravity of power and influence in Wall Street when the great American pioneering families, headed by J. P. Morgan, were superseded by international and cosmopolitan financial interests — the "Americans" to whom, according to Irving, the British Empire was surrendered by leaders like Churchill and Macmillan.

The story of America's great silent surrender will be found in Dr. Carroll Quigley's "history of the world in our century," Tragedy and Hope (beginning on page 52) — part of the reason, no doubt, why a 1300-page work by a leading American academic was hastily withdrawn by its publisher, the Macmillan Company, when still in demand.

David Irving is now evidently one of those who fully understand that the British Empire was not "liberated from the shackles of colonialism" but was only transferred, with all its natural resources and its colonial boundaries intact, to the ownership and control of the same financial powers which had gained ascendancy in Wall Street.

The good news today is that it begins to look as if it will be impossible for the global power-wielders to halt an investigative process which could quite soon reduce to tatters the vast painted cloth of spurious history which has come into existence since the end of World War II.

Notes: *Churchill gave ample proof of excellent personal qualities, including those of physical and moral courage, during a long and varied career, both as soldier and statesman; therefore, all that the new evidence means is that he appears to have fallen into a pitiful state of decline in the last years of his life, when so much was expected of him.
